

Expert IRS Audit Defense to Protect Your Finances – Avoid costly mistakes, minimize penalties, and ensure the best possible outcome with professional audit representation.

SERVICE OVERVIEW

The scenario is all too common—you open a letter from the IRS, and your jaw drops. The letter is cold, impersonal, and even threatening. Your tax return has been selected for an IRS audit. Even worse, the IRS may adjust your tax liability without even speaking to you. There's no way around it—you need tax defense.

If you receive a letter from the IRS notifying you of an audit or an adjustment to your tax liability, you need audit help immediately. The good news is that expert tax defense is only a call away.

TAKE ACTION TODAY

When an audit begins, the IRS asks seemingly innocent questions in the initial interview. However, how you answer them can dictate the outcome of your audit.

Most people without proper representation either:

- Are not truthful in their responses
- Talk excessively and incriminate themselves by offering too much information

If you fall into either of these categories, you are in BIG trouble.

Technically, you can represent yourself during an audit, but doing so is like a boxer entering a fight without gloves. The IRS selects returns for audit because they believe additional tax can be collected. They are not on your side.

Our goal is to obtain a "No Change" letter (if appropriate) or minimize any additional tax owed to the lowest amount allowable under the law.

If you're facing an audit, you need help now! Contact our firm and schedule a no-cost audit defense consultation with our tax attorney.
